Malaysia Is Prime Example Of New World Order's Efforts To Capture A Country Through Finances

11/5/98 #4 HATONN

TWO SIDES TO EVERY STORY

As we work through these days of disruption in one more delay in this foreign land, we are touched by the caring people who help us through the frustrations.

This is a place, this beautiful Malaysia, where new concepts are on trial right alongside political persons who erred and then got positioned as to downfall. I have no intent of "taking sides" for this is a human encounter and I only judge a man's actions and not the man in point. I find, however, that when a man jeopardizes his integrity through acts without wisdom and associates with known manipulators, he is likely going to be called to confrontation sooner or later.

As the bru-ha-ha gets bigger, deeper and thicker, it might be quite interesting to have an idea of what is the actual "feud" part of this encounter we call the "Anwar-Mahathir" circumstance. But this will deal more with political matters than personal indiscretions which are legal or not according to perception, perspective and where you happen

A HALF-TRUTH OR A LIE

That a lie which is all a lie may be met and fought with outright;

But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight."

TEMPERS FLARE IN TRIAL OF MALAYSIA'S ANWAR

Excerpted from the INTERNET, 11/4/98: [quoting]

Tempers flared on the third day of the trial of sacked Malaysian finance minister Anwar Ibrahim when the judge warned two defense lawyers that they could be held in contempt of court for arguing with him.

"I would like to take a serious view of the behavior of the counsel," High Court Judge Augustine Paul said after defense lawyer Gurbachan Singh had called him rude.

"I may exercise all the judicial muscle I have to bring contempt of court proceedings...against both counsels."

Singh and colleague Christopher Fernando also admonished the judge when he allowed witness Police Special Branch Director Mohamed Said Awang to state an opinion about Anwar.

Anwar was sacked from the cabinet on September 2 and arrested 18 days later after leading anti-government protesters through the capital.

He has pleaded not guilty to five counts of corruption and five of sodomy in a trial which started Monday and has focused world attention on Malaysia's politics and human rights record. [End quoting]

Be sure to read anything that Hatonn writes about this trial in his writings.

He has indicated the elite are pulling out all stops to get this puppet of theirs released and to pull down Prime Minister Mahathir and his government because Mahathir won't bow to them.

Anything you read or hear in the mainstream media about what is going on in Malaysia is usually elite propaganda—remember who has tight control of the media!! It'd be wise to hold your judgment until you know the true source of any such information.

US MARTIAL LAW COMING? COHEN PREDICTS ARMY WILL PATROL STREETS

From the INTERNET, Army Times, courtesy of Calvin Burgin, <wrldline@texas.net>, 10/29/98: [quoting]

"Terrorism is escalating to the point that Americans soon may have to choose between civil liberties and more intrusive means of protection," says Defense Secretary William S. Cohen.

The nation's defense chief told the Army Times he once considered the chilling specter of armored vehicles surrounding civilian hotels or government buildings to block out terrorists as strictly an overseas phenomenon. But no longer. "It could happen here," Cohen said he concluded after 8 months of studying threats under the Pentagon microscope. Free-lance terrorists with access to deadly chemical and biological bombs are "going to change the way in which the American people view security in our own country," he predicted in a Sep. 10 interview.

Cohen is calling for the government to step up its efforts to penetrate wildcard terrorist organizations. "It's going to require greater intelligence on our part—much greater emphasis on intelligence gathering capability—more human intelligence, and it's going to take more technical intelligence," he said.

But using the U.S. military in a domestic law enforcement role would require revisions to laws in force for more than a century, cautions Shreveport attorney John Odom, Jr. "You can't do it from the Defense Department side unless Congress dramatically revises the Posse Comitatus laws," said Odom, a colonel in the U.S. Air Force Reserve and a reserve Judge Advocate.

"The 1878 law specifically prohibits the use of the military in domestic law enforcement unless authorized by Congress or the Constitution and does not allow for military intervention through action by the Secretary of Defense or even an Executive Order from the President," Odom said. "We're trained from the first day of Judge Advocate school to think of Posse Comitatus!!!" said Odom. "If Secretary Cohen is suggesting that the Department of Defense be involved, it may be part of a legislative package, but it will not happen unilaterally without a lot of folks thinking long and hard about it."

Cohen said terrorism would be a top priority in 5 new areas he plans to focus on now that he has wrapped up his first defense budget, the quadrennial review of the military, and a new 4-year defense strategy. Other goals include modernizing the military, improving troops' housing and other benefits, streamlining the defense bureaucracy and shaping new military relationships and contracts across the globe. [End quoting]

Do you really think he studied the threats for 8 months to come to his conclusion? He was one of the designers of the plan to put the uneducated people into the position that they would ask or beg them to use these troops to protect them. Wake up!! He is part of the terrorist gangs that "the uneducated people" are asking to be protected from!!

SAID HILLARY CLINTON'S
RELATIONSHIP WITH FOSTER WAS OF A SEXUAL NATURE

From the INTERNET, courtesy of Calvin Burgin, <wrldline@texas.net>, 11/1/98: [quoting]

Former Little Rock state trooper L.D. BROWN, who guarded then Gov. Bill Clinton for 7 years, reveals in his first nationally televised interview that First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton strayed from her marriage as well.

Brown told FOX NEWS CHANNEL's DRUDGE on Saturday evening that Hillary Clinton confided to him that she felt the need to get certain things outside of her marriage.

Brown detailed for the first time conversations he had with Mrs. Clinton involving the nature of her relationship with the late Vince Foster.

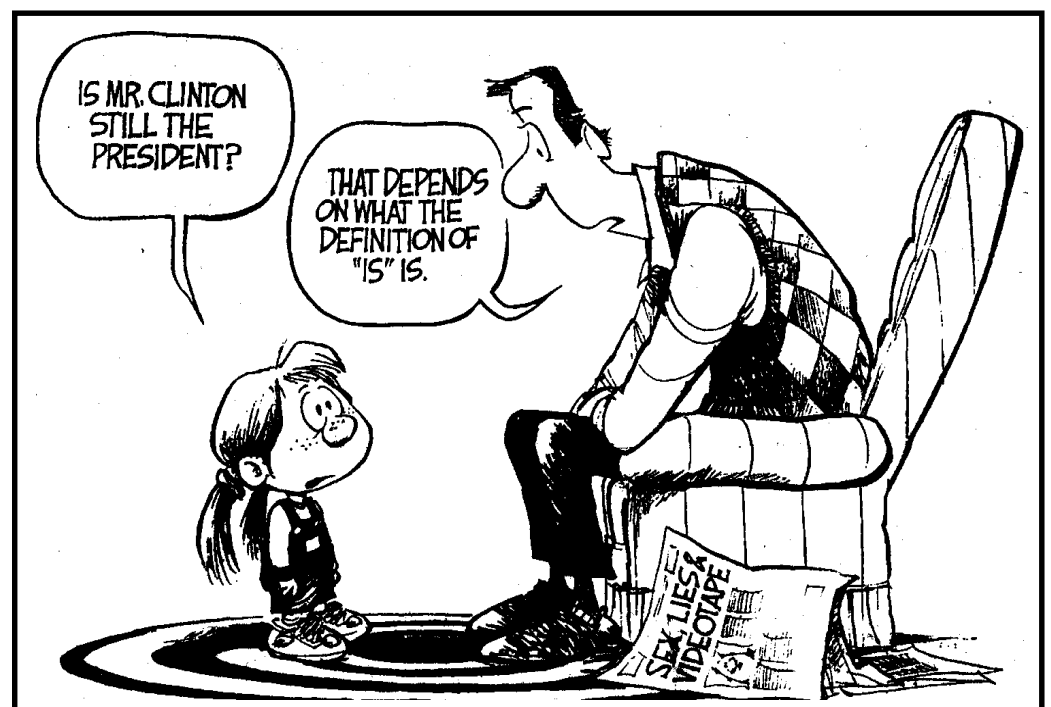

Brown said Hillary Clinton's relationship with Foster was of a sexual nature.

The interview is set to air at 9:00 PM ET/ 6:00 PM PT Saturday and Sunday on the FOX NEWS CHANNEL's DRUDGE... MORE...

Brown felt the need to go public, he told this reporter, because independent counsel Ken Starr and special prosecutor Robert Fiske failed to investigate the late Foster's intimate relationship with the First Lady and the role it may have played in his death.

"The truth has to be told now," Brown declared. "There has been too much deception."

Brown also charged that Bill Clinton's private lawyer David Kendall personally intervened to block an explosive interview that

Brown gave to ABC NEWS. [End quoting]

And of course longtime CONTACT readers have been aware of this information since the time we first covered the Vince Foster "suiciding" several years ago when it had just occurred.

CLINTON VETOES PAYMENT OF DELINQUENT U.N. DUES

From THE ORLANDO SENTINEL, 10/22/98: [quoting]

After pressing Congress for months to pay back U.N. dues, President Clinton vetoed legislation Wednesday to provide nearly $1 billion in delinquent payments, saying an unrelated anti-abortion restriction left him no choice. "I've made it clear many times that I will veto such provisions," Clinton said. With Congress finished with its legislative work for the year, there was no way for the United Nations to get its money anytime soon. [End quoting]

Whether Slick Willy wanted it paid or not, he at least prevented it from being paid, thank God!! That organization of terrorists and treasonists have already gotten far too much of our funds.

WORLD HEALTH GROUPS FOCUS ATTENTION ON PROBLEM OF MALARIA

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 10/31/98: [quoting]

World health leaders said Friday that they were declaring war on malaria, taking a whole new approach to fight the ancient disease.

The World Health Organization, World Bank, United Nations Children's Fund and the U.N. Development Program said they would take on malaria, which kills a million people every year, by strengthening the health services in developing nations and asking private companies to help.

WHO Director-General Gro Harlem Brundtland said that although malaria kills 3,000 children every day and infects upward of 500 million people, it has not received the attention that other diseases have.

The goal is to control the disease, which is caused by tiny parasites spread by mosquitoes. [End quoting]

We should have expected this or a similar announcement on this date as the elite's "trick" to the world. Remember that Halloween is the elite's high holy day and they do like their dastardly "tricks" and to "thumb their noses" at the goyim. With this in mind do you really feel safe availing yourselves of their "medical" services—or should I say "depopulation" services??

Knowing how well they've done with their "vaccination" services, do any of us want to try this one??

WHAT REQUIRES NO ID WHATSOEVER?

From the INTERNET, <http://www.carmelpinecone.com>, 11/2/98: [quoting]

WHAT you are about to read is absolutely CRUCIAL and shows how things have run amok in a MAJOR WAY. After my rant you will find details of this outrage and the related 60 Minutes segment that aired November 1, 1998 [Sunday].

VOTING DOES NOT REQUIRE, in fact it is AGAINST the LAW to ASK for, IDENTIFICATION for VOTING or even VOTER REGISTRATION.

You can even do it via the mail, as many times as you like with as many different names as you like, WITH NO ID WHATSOEVER. Then you will receive an ABSENTEE BALLOT. Of course it is a FELONY to do so, but since no ID is required, in fact cannot be asked for, it happens, and in an organized fashion! It is disgusting.

That's right, AGAINST the LAW to ask for ID for Voter registration!!! Of course I don't like ID to begin with, but why no ID for this, but you need ID to rent a film at BLOCKBUSTER! But many counties require IDENTIFICATION to register your DOG!!

That's right, you need ID to register your DOG!!! But your dog does not need ID to VOTE!!! That's right, many dogs have voted, elephants too!! A donkey and an elephant at a zoo, registered and voted in a past election. In fact the ENTIRE FICTIONAL CREW of the Starship Enterprise was registered to vote.

In Houston, at every Mail Boxes, Etc. and other similar outfits studied, at least a DOZEN voters at EACH outfit are registered there. Except when you knock on their door, no one answers!

Similar trends exist nationwide.

In New York County, over 28 pages of names of people registered more than once. And these were all at the same address!!

There were millions of other cases, and nationwide!

November 1, 1998, 60 MINUTES aired a segment on VOTER FRAUD that was, shall we say, not surprising to us, but their frankness was. Here is some related material that you should pass on to your naive friends who still believe we can effectively work within the system without mistrust and intense vigilance.

STATE WANTS PINE CONE PROSECUTED FOR VOTER FRAUD INVESTIGATION

'Fake voter' story to be aired on 60 Minutes

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

Volume 83, No. 44, Oct 30-Nov 5, 1998: [quoting]

SECRETARY OF STATE Bill Jones this week asked Monterey County District Attorney Dean Flippo to prosecute Carmel Pine Cone publishers Kirstie Wilde and Paul Miller for voter fraud.

Earlier this year, the Pine Cone registered a fictitious person, "Sandra L. Klaus," as part of a series of news articles on California's lax voter laws.

Jones' decision to seek prosecution came as the CBS News program 60 Minutes was completing its own investigation of voter fraud in California, including an extensive look at the Pine Cone's controversial story.

Correspondent Steve Kroft, producer Richard Greenberg and associate producer Anne Giordano flew to Monterey from New York last week. —Pine Cone (telephone us at 831-624-0162) [End quoting]

After Tuesday's election do you have any doubts that it was your vote that counted at the voting booth?—or was it that you quit playing in the elite's game and are working with God to change the Earth situations?

ONE THOUGHT COMES TO MIND

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 10/31/98: [quoting]

Concerning nuclear weapons. For the sake of argument, and since it's Halloween and we're supposed to scare the crap out of each other, suppose that the y2k problem causes military systems to simply not come online when the clock turns over to the year 2000. Would the backup systems interpret this as an attack, and launch counter-attacks?

While the US may be ready for such a problem, I wonder if the other countries around the world are equally prepared?

Trick or treat? [End quoting]

Another method that the elite can try, to keep we-the-people operating in the fear mode. Don't fall for it.

YEAR 2000 WOES: THEY'RE BANKING ON IT

Central bank plans to print more money in anticipation of y2k panic.

Excerpted from the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 11/3/98: [quoting]

Monday, November 2, 1998

Susanne Craig, Financial Services Reporter

The Bank of Canada plans to print extra bank notes in the coming year, anticipating a run on cash by people living in fear of the Year 2000 computer bug. A number of banks are expecting that nervous customers will sock away more bills than usual as 2000 approaches. As a result, the central bank is working with financial institutions to determine exactly how much extra money it will need to print.

"I think people might think it is prudent to hold a bit more cash," a Bank of Canada spokesman said. "We are, as other central banks, looking ahead and saying there could be some additional demands as y2k [the year 2000] approaches."

The Bank of Canada is not alone in its decision to print more money. In a report published this month, the Bank of England said it will run off extra cash in the run-up to January, 2000.

And in New Zealand, the Reserve Bank said it will keep old bank notes—which are due to be replaced next year by flexible plastic ones—in vaults instead of destroying them to ensure there will be enough cash available to its customers into 2000.

As well, the U.S. Federal Reserve Board announced last month it will have an extra $50 billion in cash on hand, just in case there is a run on money. The Fed usually keeps $150 billion in currency in reserve within government vaults. However, it plans to raise the amount it keeps in reserve to $200 billion over the next year....

Year 2000 is also giving corporate directors cause for concern. For instance, Canada Trust Co.'s board meeting ran late recently partly because there were a number of questions related to the trust company's 2000 readiness. Eugene Miller, the head of Detroit-based Comerica Inc., said 2000 is arguably the most important issue facing his board of directors. "Those boards that are not taking it seriously are making a mistake, because they can be held liable if something happens," he said.

WHAT that story ISN'T telling you, of course, IS THAT THERE IS NOT ENOUGH CASH IN THE BANKING SYSTEMS OF EITHER THE U.S. OR CANADA TO COVER MORE THAN 1.5% OF THE AMOUNT OWED TO DEPOSITORS! Printing a few billion extra dollars is nothing more than a COSMETIC EXERCISE IN PUBLIC RELATIONS, designed to persuade you that the banks have this problem under control and that you don't really need to worry about the safety of your hard-earned savings.

Right! If you believe that, you're in for a rude shock in 14 months' time. [End quoting]

It sounds like we've got one of the biggest hoaxes of all time coming up. They gain no matter what, it appears. Remember that God still has His Plan 2000!

INTERNATIONAL FINANCIERS RIG MARKET

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 10/26/98: [quoting]
"They did it openly and proudly," noted the veteran columnist.

The keynote speech delivered by Wolfensohn at the annual get-together of his World Bank (held jointly with the IMF), began with these words: "We are meeting here, under the shadow of a global crisis, united in an endeavor to protect the common welfare, to listen to ideas from all quarters, to reach out to critics and friends alike to find new solutions."

Hogwash, snorted seasoned market-watcher Donlan, whose trend-setting financial column traditionally appears every week on the last page of Barron's, the authoritative Dow-Jones financial weekly.

"We count four false pretenses in this single sentence," wrote Donlan.

What this year's World-Bank/IMF convention demonstrated once again, he explained, is that "The world is not united; there is no such thing [for bankers] as the common welfare; no one [at the convention] was listening or reaching out; and there are no new solutions for what appear to be the same old problems." These problems include predatory speculation, self-dealing greed and callous disregard for the fate of humanity.

Crudele put it even more succinctly in his Oct. 12 column: "Market-rigging may be a short-term fix, but it's sure to be a long-term disaster," he concluded. "If you're an investor who finds he can not trust the government to pave your street, much less protect your portfolio, it's time to skedaddle." [End quoting]

I'm afraid you'll need neck-high boots for this. I'm really surprised that even Barron's can't wade through it.

It looks like the elite are even nipping the hamstrings of their brothers—did they get hurt in these mass swindles by their brother mobsters?

CHILDREN SCHOOLED IN PORNOGRAPHY

Did President Clinton engage in "sex" or "mutual pleasuring"?

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 11/2/98: [quoting]

In the name of "abstinence" the federal government wants to spend tax dollars in order to teach children to practice sexual self abuse as a means of preventing the birth of illegitimate babies and AIDS.

These and other obscenities are being funded by the Department of Health and Human Services and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC).

These "guidelines" for educating the nation's school children came from the Sexual Information and Education Council of the United States (SIECUS) under a grant by the CDC.

SIECUS also recommends children ages 5-8 be taught to sexually abuse themselves. Children ages 12-15 should be taught that they can buy condoms in a drug store, supermarket or convenience store without their parents' consent. The guidelines also suggest that children 16-18 should be taught to use erotic photographs, films or literature to enhance their sexual fantasies when alone or with a partner.

"By helping teens explore the full range of safe sexual behavior, we may help raise a generation of adults who do not equate sex with intercourse," a SIECUS report explains. "Incest between adults and younger children can prove to be a satisfying and enriching experience." [!!!]

Mary Calderone, a SIECUS co-founder, had this observation: "It is not that [pedophilia] is a bad thing or a wicked thing, it just simply should not be part of life in general, right out on the sidewalk." According to "Facing Facts", a mouthpiece for SIECUS, groups such as the National Education Association, the YWCA, Child Welfare League, Advocates for Youth and Planned Parenthood have signed on to these views.

Planned Parenthood received $158,461,722 of your tax dollars to teach us that: "Outercourse with many partners can be safer than intercourse with only one". [!!!]

Planned Parenthood has adopted new language so that sex without intercourse is no longer called sex but "mutual pleasuring".

The National Coalition for Abstinence Education, which has conducted extensive research on the subject, has called for a congressional investigation on what is taught in the nation's schools. [End quoting]

SURPRISE SURPLUS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 11/2/98: [quoting]
For the first time in 29 years, the Congressional Budget Office has forecasted that the federal budget will remain in the black for years to come. It was announced that the budget is forecasted to amount to $1.6 trillion in surpluses over the next 11 years. [End quoting]

KILLING AN ARAB

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 11/2/98: [quoting]
The Libyan leader, Col. Muammar el-Quaddafi, has accused Britain of plotting to assassinate him and has proof of the botched attempt. In an interview with an Arab TV news station, Quaddafi said that MI-6, along with U.S. intelligence, tried to kill him in 1996. The United States has explicit laws that are supposed to prevent agencies from involvement in assassination attempts on world leaders. [End quoting]

Quaddafi—of all people—should know you can't believe anything the US politicians say—law or no law. This is his reward for playing with the elite goonsquads.

GOOD FOR THE GANDER

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 11/2/98: [quoting]
FBI agent Jerome Sullivan was an undercover agent who developed a nasty proclivity for gambling. He was ultimately fired for embezzling more than $400,000 tax dollars to support his habit. Defense lawyers attempted to reduce his five-year prison sentence, by proving that undercover work exacerbated previous psychological problems and addictions. A former agent testified in the hearings, "Undercover work can have a corrosive effect on the values of agents ... agents are required to lie to everybody." [End quoting]

So that's the reason the goons and crooks run our country—the pressure got so great from representing we-the-people that the only way out is to play with the "devil"—after all, he made them do it.

London has bought a new surveillance system that can target specific faces that have been entered into a computer database. The Mandrake Face Recognition system will be test-run in a part of London and will include 140 stationary cameras randomly installed on streets and 11 mobile camera units. The cameras will alert an operator who then decides whether or not to contact police. Many civil liberties groups have objected to the system saying that it opens up possibilities for innocent people to be targeted and detained. [End quoting]

POOR LITTLE RICH KIDS

From THE SPOTLIGHT, 11/2/98: [quoting]

Pediatric Dentistry reports that nearly 70 percent of children from high-socioeconomic-status families—who lived in communities that fluoridate the water—show signs of fluorosis. The article warns too much fluoride can discolor teeth. Now the American Academy of Pediatric Dentistry suggests children under the age of 2 not use fluoridated toothpaste, and water should be tested for fluoride levels. [End quoting]

Why aren't they worried by all the poor kids who are getting the same?

THE NOSE KNOWS

From POPULAR SCIENCE magazine, Nov. 1998: [quoting]

A miniature nose may soon begin turning up in gas appliances. Referred to as the nose-on-a-chip and developed at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee, the device is capable of "smelling" natural gas leaks in stoves and heaters, providing protection against explosions. It can also detect deadly carbon monoxide, a colorless and odorless gas that's the byproduct of incomplete combustion.

The device, which can be configured to notify the fire department when a leak is detected, consists of arrays of tiny (0.2mm to 0.5mm) finger-shaped silicon sensors on a computer chip. The sensors bend in the presence of certain chemicals. For instance, when hydrogen diffuses into a palladium-coated sensor, the metal expands. That expansion triggers an alarm. By selectively coating the arrays with various chemicals, the chip can be customized to detect virtually any chemical—and even several simultaneously.

The nose, which should be commercially available within two years, is inexpensive and requires little power. It's also extremely sensitive. "With certain agents, it offers sensitivity in the range of 10 parts per billion," says Oak Ridge developer Charles L. Britton. Most existing sensors are only capable of detecting single chemicals, and have large volume and power requirements.

"We can put hundreds of them in a single square centimeter," says Britton, "and they can be mass-produced using silicon micromachining techniques, making them inexpensive."

Along with use in gas appliances, Britton sees the possibility of stand-alone devices that would monitor the home for harmful gases, smoke, and other hazards. —Douglas Page [End quoting]

A very useful device, especially since it is so inexpensive.

SCRABBLE BLOOPER

Just spell it s-o-r-r-y

From THE DAILY NEWS, Los Angeles, 11/4/98: [quoting]

How many points is the word "oops" worth in Scrabble?

The Caldor department store chain apologized Tuesday after 11 million copies of an advertising circular showed two smiling boys playing Scrabble around a board with the word "rape" spelled out.

Caldor spokeswoman Jennifer Belodeau said store officials do not know who did it or how it got past the proofreaders.

She said store officials learned of the problem late Friday when a customer called to complain about the advertisement, which appeared in a 44-page toy-sale insert that was distributed over the weekend in 85 newspapers in the Northeast, where Caldor operates 145 stores.

The word "rape" is spelled vertically on the board. At least two other words on the board are nonsense words.

"Obviously, it's a mistake," Belodeau said. "It's not something that we would ever have done intentionally. While we do proofread things very carefully, with the volume on that particular page, that was something that was missed."

Belodeau said the Scrabble board in the ad originally was set up by a creative agency hired by Caldor.

She would not identify the agency.

"It could be that everybody got up and took a break, and some unknown source came in and fooled with the board. There's no way for us to know," she said.

Belodeau said Caldor and the outside agency were responsible for proofreading.

She said the department store chain got about 10 complaints from customers.

"I was just shocked that it was allowed to slip through the cracks," said Deirdre Armon, a mother of two girls and an avid Scrabble player who called a TV station in Hartford when she noticed the word.

"I was horrified to see it go out in a flier, especially for toys. That made it even more gruesome." [End quoting]

If we haven't been told over and over again and seen the proof of how the elite work, and even in our schools, I would tend to say this was a mistake. But take notice how few complained. I see this as a calculated risk worth taking to get their propaganda in front of our, and our children's, eyes. The elite know the value of this programming technique even though few may actually be aware of what is before their eyes. This is a seed planted in the subconscious. The elite crooks never miss an opportunity to plant these seeds.

SURPLUS? WHAT SURPLUS?

From THE MODESTO BEE, letter to editor, 10/29/98: [quoting]

Let's see if I have this straight. Both Democratic President Clinton and the Republican majority in Congress want to take credit for a $70 billion federal government "surplus". However, about $100 billion was borrowed from the Social Security fund. This money is now owed back to the Security fund and with interest.

Apparently we need to define what is meant by borrowed money. That could be difficult for a president who has to ponder over the meaning of "sex" and of "is". It seems to me that since this money is owed by the federal government, there really was not a surplus but about a $30 billion deficit.

Let's use an analogy. Suppose a large corporation claimed it had a $70 million profit last year. However, the corporation borrowed $100 million from its employees' pension fund. Would anyone credit this corporation with truly having made a profit? —Elton Nelson Turlock [End quoting]

He sure makes it clear. And Slick Willy says he doesn't want to spend this because he's going to use it to help stabilize Social Security (which he stole it from).

Furthermore, with this money as part of the excuse for attacking Social Security again—guess what? The Sick-Slick Willy gang is going to fix it so they can embezzle an even bigger pot from it. WILL WE EVER WAKE UP??

HOPES AND GOALS OF AN 11-YEAR-OLD

From THE MODESTO BEE, 10/18/98: [quoting]

Antony "TC" Cardenas, a seventh-grader at Mae Hensley Junior High School in Ceres, was a winner in a nationwide essay contest for Little Brothers and Little Sisters. Here is his essay:

At 11 years of age you might not think that I've given much thought to any hopes and dreams. But the opposite would be more accurate. I would like to be a professional musician. Guitar or keyboards, to be specific.

One of the things I really love doing is writing. When I put my thoughts down on paper, I can be anyone and do everything. I can explore worlds of my own creation. My imagination is my only limit. It would be a thrill to have my own words published. I hope I have the opportunity to attend college.

My biggest dream is not so much for fame or fortune but to make a difference in someone's life. To be remembered. To be me.

So, what steps have I taken these last few months? I've checked out a tape from the library and taught myself how to play guitar. And I'm pretty good too! My friend, Whitney, has been taking piano lessons for years and showed me a couple of riffs on the keyboard. With some of my other friends, we formed a band named Haven. We played our first gig at school.

I've already written several short stories for school assignments and I'm working on my own science-fiction book. I work hard in school to keep all my grades up. I know I'll need high marks to get into a good college. I have a separate college education fund of $200.

I think I make a good friend and my friends are important to me. I have friends from different cultures and ethnic backgrounds. I would never think of making fun of them. I am respectful to all people because they deserve it.

Another thing I wish to be known for is my honesty. I don't lie, cheat or steal. At our school we have the DARE program. I take it very seriously. I am committed to staying drug free. I am active in sports.

All these things plus my belief in God make me the person I am. I will be remembered.

Oh, and when I grow up, if I'm lucky enough to become a parent, I would never dream of leaving my children. [End quoting]

Don't ever give up hope!! There are many of these "God's children" that have and are being born into our midst to lead us into the "Radiance". Let's welcome them and show them our appreciation for their willingness to volunteer to assist us during these times of turbulence.

OUR BREAKING POINT

From GUIDEPOSTS, Sep. 1998, P.O. Box 1479, Carmel, NY 10512: [quoting]

The sky was a blinding blue that October afternoon, the kind of crisp autumn day our boys loved. I could imagine Brent, 5, and Blake, 3, tearing across our yard and with a whoop, leaping into the huge pile of leaves their big brother, Scott, 13, had raked.

Except that was never going to happen again. Blake was dead, victim of a strain of bacterial meningitis so vicious it snuffed out his life in the space of a few hours. Instead of watching him climb the oak tree out front, hearing him laugh with delight when he made it higher than before, we were laying him to rest.

A sob escaped me, and my husband, Jeff, squeezed my hand tighter as we stood beside our son's grave. The service had ended, punctuated by the thuds of car doors as mourners left the cemetery. But we couldn't bring ourselves to leave Blake. Not yet.

Finally our pastor slid an arm around each of us and led us away from the small mound of newly turned dirt. "Pat, Jeff," he said, "saying goodbye to your son was probably the hardest thing you've ever done. But I have to warn you, the months ahead will be even tougher."

I didn't see how anything could be worse than losing Blake.

"A loss like this puts a terrible strain on a marriage," he continued. "Couples end up divorced. I'm not saying that's going to happen to you, but don't be afraid to ask for help."

We won't need help, I thought. Nothing could destroy our marriage.

"You don't have to worry about us," Jeff said firmly. "Pat and I will get through this the way we get through everything—together."

For days afterward I was never far from Jeff, nor he from me. We tried to be strong in front of the boys. It was best for them if things settled down and returned to normal.

Privately I wondered if they ever would. Even the simple act of waking up wasn't the same. Jeff and I used to savor the early morning—before work, chores and the kids came rushing at us. We'd talk a while, holding each other. Then I'd listen as Jeff said a prayer. It made us feel centered to start the day with a quiet moment together. But now we couldn't find that peace, no matter how we clung to each other. At night we'd lie side by side, sleepless, then slip into a fitful doze only to be startled awake by the alarm clock.

One morning a week after the funeral Jeff asked, "You awake, Babe?"

"I couldn't sleep."

"Neither could I," he said. "I've been thinking ... I'm going back to work today."

"You can't!" I cried. "It's too soon."

"I have to," Jeff said. "They need me at the store." He managed his family's hardware business, and I knew he couldn't be away from it for long. But what would I do all day on my own?

"Don't leave me," I pleaded, clutching his arm.

He eased out of my grip, out of bed, and started getting ready. Before he left he kissed me on the forehead and told me reassuringly, "You'll be okay, Babe. Call me."

I wasn't okay. Not even close. After I got Scott and Brent off to school, I crept back to bed, exhausted from the effort of trying to be cheerful for them. Around lunchtime, still in my nightgown, I dragged myself into the kitchen. Mechanically I lined up bread, peanut butter and grape jelly on the counter and began assembling a sandwich. I trimmed the crust off the bread. Just the way Blake likes it, I thought.

With a jolt, I realized what I was doing. I bolted from the kitchen and flung myself on Blake's bed, stifling my sobs in his pillow. "My sweet baby," I whispered. Late in the afternoon I heard the rumble of a school bus. I can't let the boys see me like this. I forced myself to get up and get dressed.

When Jeff came in that evening, he asked with a hopeful smile, "How'd it go today?"

"It was awful," I replied. "I barely made it out of bed."

"Oh, Babe," he said, pulling me close. "It'll get better."

As the weeks passed, it did seem to get easier—for Jeff. He had his work. But for me, the ache of loss only deepened. Laundry, cooking and cleaning became mere drudgery, no longer games to dawdle over with my little helper, Blake, at my heels. Without him chattering away, an oppressive silence pervaded the house. At first I left the TV on, but the songs on Sesame Street reminded me how Blake loved Big Bird. I'd catch myself peering out the living room window, waiting for Scott and Brent to get home from school and rescue me from my loneliness.

By the time Jeff got home I was desperate for his company. As soon as we were alone, I dug in. One evening he got in bed and settled back with a magazine. He hadn't turned a page before I announced, "We need to talk."

A pained expression crept over his face. He knew what was coming. "I'll be glad to listen," he said. "Just please don't ask me to talk about Blake. I can't anymore."

"I really have to go over what happened that last day," I insisted. For the next half hour I recounted every agonizing detail. I almost forgot Jeff was there, until he touched my arm. "Be right back," he said and disappeared into the bathroom. When he didn't emerge I glared at the closed door. Why didn't he want to talk about Blake? They had been so close, so alike. Didn't Jeff miss him the way I did, so much that it physically hurt?

Months slipped by, and we stumbled on through the uncharted territory of grief. Near dawn one morning I lay in bed listening to Jeff's even breathing, getting angrier and angrier. Our little boy was dead, and he was sleeping as if nothing were wrong! I don't know what got into me, but I gave him a swift poke in the ribs.

"What?" he mumbled sleepily.

"You were snoring."

"Sorry." He sat up, awake. "Babe," he said, taking my hand, "don't you think it's time we went back to our morning prayer?"

"I can't pray to a God who didn't save my child," I said, pulling away, the bitterness in my own voice frightening me.

"Then I'll pray for you," he said softly.

"I don't need your prayers!" They can't comfort me, and neither can you, I added silently.

It became harder for us to live in our home without Blake. Brent refused to sleep in the bedroom they had shared. We all avoided that room, still filled with Blake's clothes, toys and lingering little-boy smell. But no matter where we went in the house, something called forth the memory of the sunny-faced toddler whose giggles still echoed in our minds.

One evening as Jeff helped me clear the table, he offered a solution. "I think we should move," he said. "Maybe it'll give us a new start. I want us to be a family again."

I nodded warily. I wanted that too, but I was beginning to wonder if the warning our pastor had given us was coming true.

"Most of all," Jeff added, his gaze resting on me tenderly, "I want my girl back."

"That girl is gone forever," I snapped, not thinking. "Just like Blake." Immediately I felt bad, but it was too late to take it back.

We looked for a house for months, with no luck. Finally we decided to build our own. After long days at the store, Jeff grabbed quick suppers with us, then rushed out to work on the house, leaving me alone with the boys. The tension between us escalated. We had rarely exchanged a harsh word in all our years of marriage. Now we bickered constantly. He was determined to stay within budget, and I didn't see the point of building a home if we had to cut corners. We stopped smiling at each other, stopped touching. That patient "I'm praying for you" expression on Jeff's face infuriated me. The qualities that had once drawn me to him—his quiet strength, his steadiness—left me cold.

One day after a nasty skirmish, I caught Jeff muttering, "That woman will send us to the poorhouse!"

I felt a stab of hurt and a sudden, dreadful revelation: Somehow I had gone from being his "Babe" to "that woman".

"I'm sick of this!" I cried, powerless to stem the rush of angry words from my lips. "I'm sick of pretending everything's okay between us. Maybe we should just call it quits!"

The air vibrated with a silence more terrible than that which filled the house after Blake died.

Then Jeff took me by the shoulders and held me, more with his solemn gaze than with his touch. "Pat," he said, his voice breaking, "as much as Blake loved our family, how do you think he would feel if his death split us up?"

Blake. Our family. Love. Like arrows hitting their mark, the words pierced the armor of anger I had isolated myself in, not just from my husband but from God. With something like relief, I sank into Jeff's arms. Together we wept for our son, and for what our grief had done to our marriage.

"Going on without Blake is hard enough," Jeff whispered, gently tracing the tracks of my tears with his thumb. "I can't make it without you."

"I can't make it without you either," I said. I had been so wrapped up in my pain that I hadn't seen Jeff had been hurting too, in his own quiet way. I reached up and pressed his hand to my cheek. "I need you."

It was a beginning. We made time for each other again, every day, not necessarily for long talks but simply to be together. I saw a counselor who guided me in coping with my grief. Jeff brought me in to work part time at the store. Each small change was a step toward him, toward love and healing.

As much work as we put into our new house, we put more into building a new life together. It wouldn't be the same without Blake. It couldn't. Still, I knew it would be a good life when early one spring morning I heard Jeff say, "Thank you, God, for all you've given us. Our children, our health..." I found myself holding him closer and adding, "...and our love for each other, and for you."

ALL GOOD THINGS

From the INTERNET, <para-discuss@tje.net>, 10/30/98: [quoting]

He was in the first third-grade class I taught at Saint Mary's School in Morris, Minn. All 34 of my students were dear to me, but Mark Eklund was one in a million. Very neat in appearance, but had that happy-to-be-alive attitude that made even his occasional mischievousness delightful.

Mark talked incessantly. I had to remind him again and again that talking without permission was not acceptable. What impressed me so much, though, was his sincere response every time I had to correct him for misbehaving—"Thank you for correcting me, Sister!"

I didn't know what to make of it at first, but before long I became accustomed to hearing it many times a day.

One morning my patience was growing thin when Mark talked once too often, and then I made a novice-teacher's mistake. I looked at Mark and said, "If you say one more word, I am going to tape your mouth shut!"

It wasn't ten seconds later when Chuck blurted out, "Mark is talking again." I hadn't asked any of the students to help me watch Mark, but since I had stated the punishment in front of the class, I had to act on it.

I remember the scene as if it had occurred this morning. I walked to my desk, very deliberately opened my drawer and took out a roll of masking tape. Without saying a word, I proceeded to Mark's desk, tore off two pieces of tape and made a big X with them over his mouth. I then returned to the front of the room.

As I glanced at Mark to see how he was doing, he winked at me. That did it!! I started laughing. The class cheered as I walked back to Mark's desk, removed the tape, and shrugged my shoulders. His first words were, "Thank you for correcting me, Sister."

At the end of the year, I was asked to teach junior-high math. The years flew by, and before I knew it Mark was in my classroom again.

He was more handsome than ever and just as polite. Since he had to listen carefully to my instruction in the "new math", he did not talk as much in ninth grade as he had in third. One Friday, things just didn't feel right. We had worked hard on a new concept all week, and I sensed that the students were frowning, frustrated with themselves and edgy with one another. I had to stop this crankiness before it got out of hand.

So I asked them to list the names of the other students in the room on two sheets of paper, leaving a space between each name. Then I told them to think of the nicest thing they could say about each of their classmates and write it down. It took the remainder of the class period to finish their assignment, and as the students left the room, each one handed me the papers. Charlie smiled.

Mark said, "Thank you for teaching me, Sister. Have a good weekend."

That Saturday, I wrote down the name of each student on a separate sheet of paper, and I listed what everyone else had said about that individual. On Monday I gave each student his or her list. Before long, the entire class was smiling. "Really?" I heard whispered. "I never knew that meant anything to anyone!" "I didn't know others liked me so much." No one ever mentioned those papers in class again.

I never knew if they discussed them after class or with their parents, but it didn't matter. The exercise had accomplished its purpose. The students were happy with themselves and one another again.

That group of students moved on. Several years later, after I returned from vacation, my parents met me at the airport. As we were driving home, Mother asked me the usual questions about the trip—the weather, my experiences in general. There was a lull in the conversation.

Mother gave Dad a side-ways glance and simply says, "Dad?" My father cleared his throat as he usually did before something important. "The Eklunds called last night," he began. "Really?" I said. "I haven't heard from them in years. I wonder how Mark is."

Dad responded quietly. "Mark was killed in Vietnam," he said. "The funeral is tomorrow, and his parents would like it if you could attend."

To this day I can still point to the exact spot on I-494 where Dad told me about Mark.

I had never seen a serviceman in a military coffin before. Mark looked so handsome, so mature. All I could think at that moment was, Mark I would give all the masking tape in the world if only you would talk to me.

The church was packed with Mark's friends. Chuck's sister sang The Battle Hymn of the Republic. Why did it have to rain on the day of the funeral? It was difficult enough at the graveside. The pastor said the usual prayers, and the bugler played taps. One by one those who loved Mark took a last walk by the coffin and sprinkled it with holy water.

I was the last one to bless the coffin. As I stood there, one of the soldiers who acted as pallbearer came up to me. "Were you Mark's math teacher?" he asked. I nodded as I continued to stare at the coffin.

"Mark talked about you a lot," he said.

After the funeral, most of Mark's former classmates headed to Chuck's farmhouse for lunch. Mark's mother and father were there, obviously waiting for me. "We want to show you something," his father said, taking a wallet out of his pocket. "They found this on Mark when he was killed. We thought you might recognize it."

Opening the billfold, he carefully removed two worn pieces of notebook paper that had obviously been taped, folded and refolded many times.

I knew without looking that the papers were the ones on which I had listed all the good things each of Mark's classmates had said about him.

"Thank you so much for doing that," Mark's mother said. "As you can see, Mark treasured it."

Mark's classmates started to gather around us. Charlie smiled rather sheepishly and said, "I still have my list. It's in the top drawer of my desk at home." Chuck's wife said, "Chuck asked me to put his in our wedding album."

"I have mine too," Marilyn said. "It's in my diary."

Then Vicki, another classmate, reached into her pocketbook, took out her wallet and showed her worn and frazzled list to the group. "I carry this with me at all times," Vicki said without batting an eyelash.

"I think we all saved our lists." That's when I finally sat down and cried. I cried for Mark and for all his friends who would never see him again.

THE FEUD

How Mahathir and Anwar became embroiled in a clash that threatens to send Malaysia into upheaval.

by: Sheri Prasso and Mark Clifford in Kuala Lumpur, with Joyce Barnathan in Hong Kong

To Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad, who has a passion for flying and sailing, Malaysia's annual air and boat show on the island of Langkawi was an event he hated to miss—even as his nation stumbled through an economic crisis. So Mahathir decided to hold the Dec. 3, 1997 meeting of the Malaysian Cabinet on the island, instead of in the capital of Kuala Lumpur.

But by the time he arrived at the elegant Gunung Raya hilltop retreat, Mahathir was in for a jolt. His next-in-command—Deputy Prime Minister Anwar Ibrahim—had virtually concluded business without him, according to sources knowledgeable about the meeting. In what amounted to an economic coup, the cabinet had decided to adopt an austerity plan similar to those imposed on neighboring Thailand and Indonesia by the International Monetary Fund. The plan would slash public spending and halt infrastructure projects championed by Mahathir.

The new policy was a stunning rebuke to Mahathir. Since the onset of the Asian crisis five months earlier, he had been railing against a perceived Western conspiracy and insisting Malaysia could maintain its breakneck growth. Mahathir's reaction: he humbly agreed to go along with his Cabinet's decision—but on the very next day undermined it by announcing Malaysia would proceed with a controversial $2.7 billion rail and pipeline project. Alarmed investors immediately sent the ringgit to a new low.

Those intrigue-filled days in December were a prelude to what has become Malaysia's worst political crisis in nearly three decades. Although Mahathir and Anwar had long had differences over economic stewardship and management of political spoils, that rift widened as Asia's financial crisis wore on and the two leaders worked increasingly at cross-purposes. Ultimately, the dispute led Mahathir to clamp controls on the currency and jail his deputy, casting himself as an international rogue.

Today, the clash threatens to send Malaysia into upheaval. Anwar, a central player in the old patronage system, has now emerged as a hero of the swelling reformasi movement, which advocates a more open society and economy. He goes on trail Nov. 2 on 10 charges of sodomy and corruption. A conviction could turn the protests into an ugly confrontation.

How did the two men end up so militantly opposed to each other? Over the past month, BUSINESS WEEK interviewed dozens of Malaysians from both camps, including Anwar prior to his arrest, prominent pro-Mahathir businessmen, informed academics, and Anwar associates. Together, they draw portraits of the one-time allies and their battle to control the future of Malaysia Inc., an economic model that uses patronage to speed economic development.

HEIR APPARENT. It is a tragic spectacle. Just a few years ago, Mahathir was poised to retire from politics as the prickly but nonetheless brilliant and erudite architect of a model developing nation. And Anwar, the anointed successor, would smoothly take the helm of the ruling United Malays National Organization (UMNO) and lead a modern, politically stable 21st century economy. Former Islamic radical Anwar, 51, was the more Western-friendly of the two, often quoting Shakespeare and hobnobbing with the moguls of international finance. Mahathir, 72, has long taken a confrontational stance toward the West. But like Anwar, he viewed foreign investment as key to Malaysia's economy and advocated freer trade within Asia.

Both also were savvy politicians who steered choice deals to their allies in the business community. Just last year, foreign investors criticized the government's handling of insider deals by Malaysia Resources Corp., a media and infrastructure company controlled by Anwar allies.

Still, Anwar had a reform agenda. In recent years, he increasingly advocated the rule of law and more transparency. But until the crisis erupted, he was willing to bide his time until it was his turn to run the country. "He was that close to power," says Anwar's wife, Azizah Ismail, holding her thumb and forefinger close together. "He was tolerating a lot."

Perhaps the key difference between the two leaders was their outlook on the world. Anwar quickly realized that the meltdowns of Thailand and Indonesia were caused by excessive borrowing, overbuilding, and big trade imbalances—and that Malaysia's situation was similar. Malaysia didn't yet need an IMF bailout, but he feared its economy would implode without swift action. While this surely would hurt his business allies, Anwar was willing to have Malaysia absorb economic pain first and rebuild for the future.

Mahathir looked at it differently. Unlike the ascendant Anwar, he was in the twilight of his career—and feared for his legacy. While Anwar hinted he wanted to end patronage, Mahathir genuinely thought the system he proudly calls "Malaysia Incorporated" was a legitimate model for developing nations. A handful of wealthy businessmen are singled out for privileges and given the role of creating jobs, implementing big projects, and keeping the economy and the ruling party humming. Then wealth trickles down from Mahathir's chosen few to the many. "We view Malaysia as a corporation, and the shareholders in the government are companies," says Mustapha Mohamed, the new No. 2 at the Finance Ministry. "To the extent you help the bigger guys, the smaller guys benefit." When Western agencies attacked his system as institutionalized corruption, Mahathir "was quite angry," says Francis Yeoh, managing director of YTL Corp. and a longtime Mahathir ally. "He found it incredibly hypocritical and unfair." Mahathir declined to be interviewed.

When Malaysia was growing 8% to 10% annually, the uneasy alliance worked. But the crisis in Malaysia's financial markets provoked a fury in Mahathir toward the outside world. The feud broke out two days after Mahathir returned from a two-month globe-trotting sabbatical in July, 1997, just as the crisis hit. He began blasting foreigners—and he kept it up for months. He blamed "international manipulators" such as financier George Soros and Jewish traders for trying to undo the success of the Muslim Malaysians. [H: Gosh, was he making an understatement—try undoing the success of THE WORLD.]

Malaysian officials grew weary of the Mahathir effect on the currency and stock markets. The central Bank Negara tracked the plunges in the ringgit every time Mahathir lashed out, and officials showed him the data. If Mahathir would tone it down, they suggested, the ringgit might stabilize. For a while, he complied.

Meanwhile, Anwar tightened up on money and began urging Mahathir to suspend big infrastructure projects. When Mahathir agreed on Sept. 5 to postpone the $5.3 billion Bakum Dam, a new airport, and plans to build the world's longest building, the market enjoyed the largest one-day surge in over three years. But it fizzled as the crisis deepened.

Mahathir's patience ran out. On Nov. 21, he set up the National Economic Action Council to devise remedies. It included Mahathir, Anwar, economic adviser Daim Zainuddin, and prominent economists and business leaders. Council members quickly squared off over the best cure for the crisis: the IMF's austerity medicine or the easy money and massive government spending Mahathir preferred. "We argued back and forth, back and forth," recalls Zainal Aznam Yusof, deputy director of the Institute for Strategic & International Studies, a government think tank. [H: Boy is that an oxymoron or what?] But as the months wore on, “we became convinced that you cannot go on with tightening monetary policy. You might push the economy over the edge.”

Then came a move that rocked market confidence and drove a deeper wedge between Anwar and Mahathir: the bailout of big infrastructure developer Renong. Headed by longtime Mahathir associate Halim Saad, it was precisely the sort of company Mahathir was determined to save, and was choking under a pile of debt. In a complex transaction that left minority shareholders in the cold, Renong subsidiary United Engineers Malaysia (UEM) paid a stiff premium to buy out the parent company. Analysts suspected that Mahathir allies benefited, a charge Renong denied. [H: I wish I had time to tell you in detail what “Renong” is all about for it is about the most important network of highways and infrastructure a nation MUST HAVE TO EXIST.]

Anwar, miffed at the way the bailout was handled, ordered regulators to investigate. UEM was found to have broken disclosure rules, but the punishment was light. “Within two weeks of the Renong-UEM deal being announced, it was all over” for Malaysia’s stock market, says a local securities trader.

Five days after the Renong bailout came the meeting on Langkawi. Anwar, having just met with IMF Managing Director Michael Camdessus and acting on the advice of his central bank governor, Ahmad Don, had concluded that the IMF formula of tight monetary policy and government austerity was right. The Cabinet agreed. When Mahathir arrived, the virtual IMF program was a fait accompli.

“MORAL OBJECTION”. But local business leaders were growing unhappy with the effects of Anwar’s policies. So was Mahathir. “The intensity of business collapses and bank collapses was like tenpins falling every day,” says YTL’s Yeoh. “He couldn’t stand it.” Adds another prominent businessman: “He doesn’t believe in bankruptcies. He has a moral objection to them.” [H: Isn’t it time SOMEONE had some moral objections to lies, cheating, stealing and total manipulation?]

The attempts to get around Anwar’s IMF-style budget grew. According to Anwar associates, Daim called the CEO of Bank Bumiputra, Abdul Aziz Othman, and asked him to lend $20 million to a company in trouble. After checking with Anwar, these sources say, Aziz told Daim no. Tensions between Daim and Anwar rose. Daim declines to comment on the allegation or other matters related to Anwar. Bank Bumi did not respond to requests for comment.

By February, Mahathir was pushing for more bailouts. Anwar aides contend that the Prime Minister had broached the idea of using Petroliam Nasional (Petronas) to bail out his son Mirzan Mahathir’s shipping company, Konsortium Perkapalan, which had trouble servicing its $490 million debt. Both Mirzan and Petronas deny the Prime Minister had anything to do with the $220 million purchase of KP’s assets by a Petronas unit. “I didn’t ask him to intervene. I just told him that any businessman faced with this situation will have to sell and pay down the debt,” says Mirzan, who holds a Wharton MBA. “We believe we are a viable company.”

But the deal reminded many Malaysians of Indonesia’s Suharto, who fell partly because of his family’s greed. In 1994, opposition politicians criticized the stakes Mahathir’s sons had in over 200 companies. Now, those concerns were resurfacing. Comparisons with Suharto “must have upset Dr. Mahathir, even though there are important differences between the two,” says University of Malaya economist K.S. Jomo.

In April, the Anwar-Mahathir rift grew wider. Speaking in New York at the elite Council on Foreign Relations, Anwar lauded the virtues of “creative destruction”. Mahathir would deride that term time and again in speeches months later. Anwar later told Mahathir he was trying to push Malaysia’s agenda by calling for reform of the international monetary system. But he did not mince his words in New York about what was going on back home. “What are meant to be mere crutches often become permanent appendages, spawning a dependency mentality AND RENDERING THE PUBLIC PURSE A RICH FEEDING GROUND FOR ALL KINDS OF PARASITES,” HE SAID TO APPLAUSE. [H: The CFR yet!]

Yet while he was away, Anwar got wind of another attempted bailout, this time for Daim pal Tajudin Ramli at Malaysia Airlines. [H: How do you feel about TWO airlines?] “The moment my back is turned, they push through this nonsense,” he told his aides. “How am I supposed to explain this over here?” Mahathir denied he was involved. Anwar suggested the Finance Ministry would veto the deal, and it was never done.

Shortly after Anwar returned home, Suharto fell. Mahathir had met with the aging strongman in Cairo on May 14 at the G-15 summit. Mahathir left the meeting speaking of “foreign parties trying to unseat us both”. The new Indonesian President, B.J. Habibie, was a friend of Anwar.

ESPIONAGE CHARGES. So was Indonesian newspaper editor Nasir Tamara, who caused a flap on June 2 when he addressed Malaysian scholars, businessmen, and social activists assembled by Anwar’s think tank. While he didn’t mention Malaysia, Nasir spoke of cronyism and explained how the reformasi movement toppled Suharto. An Anwar aide says Mahathir questioned his deputy about the speech.

By the time the UMNO General Assembly meeting began on June 20, Mahathir had decided to get rid of Anwar—and the open battle began. Information packets given to the 1,900 conference attendees all contained a book alleging homosexual and heterosexual affairs by Anwar. The book, Fifty Reasons Why Anwar Cannot Be Prime Minister, also charged him with spying for a foreign power. Diplomats and other sources say the book could not have been distributed without Mahathir’s knowledge.

Anwar’s camp returned fire. The leader of the UMNO Youth league, Ahmad Zahid Hamidi, criticized the government for “corruption, collusion, and nepotism.” Mahathir blasted back the next day, saying that everyone, including Anwar and his allies, had benefited from the state’s largesse. Days later, Mahathir announced that Daim would take over management of the economy. Anwar’s role was sharply curtailed. At a mention of Daim during an interview with BUSINESS WEEK on June 30, Anwar crossed his arms and visibly stiffened.

By the end of August, Malaysian stocks were down 80% from the previous year. On Sept. 1, Mahathir shocked the world by imposing currency controls. He told Anwar to resign by 5:30 p.m. the following day “or I’ll humiliate you tomorrow”, according to former Anwar aides. He refused. “I told him, ‘If you resign it’s like an admission of guilt,’” Anwar’s wife Azizah recalls saying the next day over a lunch where the food went uneaten. Anwar then went to his Finance Ministry office. At 5:30, the power went off at his official residence. At 7, Anwar received a letter from Mahathir saying he had been dismissed.

“I tried to work within the system,” Anwar told BUSINESS WEEK three days after his ouster. But now, Anwar acted like the outsider. He organized the biggest protest in Malaysia’s history on Sept. 20, attended by up to 50,000 people, to call for reform. That day, Britain’s Queen Elizabeth II was in town for the Commonwealth Games. Mahathir ordered Anwar’s arrest that night. A week later, Anwar appeared in court, bruised from what he said was a police beating. [H: Now we have gotten to the gutter of garbage again. Remember that the Commonwealth Games were on and thousands upon thousands of people were present—not for a protest but as visitors. The protest took place near a church yet, where Queen Elizabeth would be seen by the cameras and the people had come to see the Queen. Is this dirty pool or what? Now as to that bruised eye: we have heard it all. That eye was NOTHING and yet we have been told by Anwar that the police “beat him unconscious” and then later the former head of Hong Kong, idiot that he IS, said his good friend was “beaten to a pulp”. If these things are true then either the police in Kuala Lumpur are not as good as the cops who beat people unconscious in the U.S., are wimps, or the unconsciousness comes from a blow to the upper cheek area below the eye? This is a laughing stock item here in Kuala Lumpur because Anwar showed up in court immediately with a small bruise but no infirmities. Does this not sound like a Zionist screenplay of slapstick idiocy?]

Whatever the verdict in Anwar’s trial, it is unlikely to end the momentum for reform kindled by his ouster. Clearly Malaysia’s reform movement has legs, although no one wants a repeat of the violence that devastated Indonesia during Suharto’s fall. It looks like the transition won’t be easy. Mahathir seems intent on staying in power to safeguard the economic structure he spent 17 years building. But even if Anwar vanishes from power, the questions he posed in the turbulent year will haunt his stern mentor for years to come.

[END OF QUOTING]

I will simply leave this with you now and without more input. I think you can see the handwriting on the wall from all this effort of the New World Order to take over this country through its financial leadership. Isn’t it time that the world considered some alternative moves and let the worthless, non-backed funding system of the IMF go strangle itself? It is time to WAKE UP, WORLD! Salu.

Hilarion: The Big Deal About “Little” Things

11/8/98 HILARION

Greetings, my friend! It is I, Master Hilarion, Cohan (Master Teacher) of the Emerald Ray of healing. I come in and of the One Light of Creator Source. You know me well.

There are many who are feeling the “brunt” of the constant frequency upshifts of your planetary system. This is to say that there are many Light workers who are finding themselves in a compromised state of health. This is in great part due to a lack of self awareness of the “small” habits of thoughts that are not in harmony with Higher self (the soul you).

These are habitual frequency patterns, which have some negative component to them, that have become a routine part of your day-to-day inner experience. These are the “little” annoyances that ones seem to accept as

Heart troubles, cancers and such ALWAYS come about by not paying attention to the subtle “little” things that cause you to feel uneasy.

Now, this discussion so far has been a review for most of you. However, there is an added factor which is affecting this equation at the present time: Your planet and all of her inhabitants are going through a rapid increase in frequency. The rate of this frequency increase will itself continue to increase until a new level of equilibrium is reached. This cycle will continue over the next five to seven years.

What does this mean in terms of your health? Well, in the past, what took thirty years of chronic “small” annoyances to develop into a weakened heart or cancer will begin to manifest in smaller and smaller increments of time. THIS IS TO SAY THAT A SMALL ANNOYANCE MAY RAPIDLY GROW INTO SEVERE ILLNESS IN A MATTER OF MONTHS INSTEAD OF YEARS!

Viewed from a larger perspective, this is the Cleansing and Purification Cycle. You will have need to examine these small “things” that cause you even the slightest of stress. In doing so, you will find that behind each is a limiting belief or misunderstanding which, if recognized as such, will help you to grow in many untold ways.

These physiological reactions to the very natural frequency shift of your planet at this time are a great part of why you have chosen to come and experience here now. These physiological indicators will act as a great tool to help you to focus-in on those “small” things which tend to get overlooked, lifetime after lifetime.

Many of you will find that you are getting “sick” despite taking adequate precautions body from foreign invaders.

Many would rather die than confront the fact that, out of years of bitterness, denial, anger or such, they have created their illness by slowly choking off their connection to the inner Life-Force which would have otherwise helped them to regain balance.

But, for those inner diseases caused by years of unchecked annoyance, all of the elixirs and potions in the world will not even begin to work—unless and until you first come to grips with the reality that the illness IS IN RESPONSE TO YOUR VIBRATIONAL FREQUENCY and thus YOU are creating the illness in the first place.

Many would rather die than confront the fact that, out of years of bitterness, denial, anger or such, they have created their illness by slowly choking off their connection to the inner Life-Force which would have otherwise helped them to regain balance.

More and more you will need to learn to recognize the importance of EVERY feeling you experience. Know that these are merely indicators for you to observe so that you can know whether or not you are in harmony with your Higher Knowing self. A mismatch will always register as an uneasy (negative) feeling. Learn to use this sensing mechanism as the guidance system it is intended to be.

This does not mean go out and look for negative feelings! It simply means TAKE NOTE of any such feeling when it occurs and realize that you have just been given a “nudge” that what you are dwelling upon is counter to who you are as a being and you would be wise to reconsider your thoughts on the subject.

Let’s say you habitually get up every morning and reach for that good old cup of hot coffee. As you are stirring it and smelling it, you begin to contemplate your day and all that you would like to get done. Shortly after you take the first few sips of your coffee, you begin to feel an anxiety of not enough time to get done all that you would like to get done.

Viewed from a larger perspective, this is the Cleansing and Purification Cycle. You will have need to examine these small “things” that cause you even the slightest of stress. In doing so, you will find that behind each is a limiting belief or misunderstanding which, if recognized as such, will help you to grow in many untold ways.

“reasonable” and, therefore, are considered not important enough to waste the energy or time to find the cause, and subsequent understanding, of why you hold onto such feelings.

Each and every thought or idea that you have, and the resulting feeling(s) associated with it, has an effect on you—and more importantly, a reason for presenting itself to you. Many are quick to analyze the “big” stuff, such as a life-threatening “accident” or other “traumatic” events which cause a great deal of pain and unrest. But, few ever pay much attention to the subtle, yet chronic annoyances in their day-to-day routine of living.

These “small” things often will grow, if left unchecked, into various forms of illness.

How many of you would stop to consider that this subtle annoyance may actually be a reaction to the coffee itself? Why? Because its many chemical combinations are actually tearing down the immune system and you are setting yourself up, due to this excess chemical burden, for a quite-a-bit shorter life than you intended. You can continue to ignore your body's cry for balance, but there is wisdom to be gained in paying attention to ALL of the clues available to you.

Though this is but an example, and very few drink coffee to this excess, the example serves to point out how easily subtle annoyances can be rationalized away as insignificant or unimportant. You each have your chronic worries and limiting beliefs. These are the greater reasons behind the "need" for stimulants such as caffeine and nicotine to begin with.

How many of you are so enthused about life that you can bounce out of bed, hit the floor running, and your day is continually packed with excitement and newness? This is a common occurrence with young children who have not been trained otherwise. This is also a common occurrence with animals who have not been trained otherwise. Why is it different for so-called intelligent, reasonable adults?

Observe the elderly in your society. Though there are always exceptions, the majority walk slow, their posture seems to reflect a withdrawn attitude; they tend to look down instead of up. The majority are taking several forms of medication so as to "feel" better. (In actuality they are taking the medications to numb themselves so as to feel nothing.)

Now let us look at the children who are practically running wherever they go, so as to not miss anything. They spend time playing and pretending and ENJOYING the moment. Most are simply happy to just be alive and explore all the new sensations of their current experience.

The in-between condition, where the majority of you are, is where you gather the baggage of negative experience and lug it around, thinking that it is somehow important. Eventually you will either learn to let it go or you will begin to withdraw inward. Your posture will begin to reflect this and you will stop looking upward. You then soon become the elderly person seeking relief from your inner pain.

This need not be the cycle that you follow! You are each quite capable of digesting the importance and implications of this message. When you begin to seek outward chemicals to soothe an inner problem or feeling of unrest, you can know that you are on the path that leads to the "typical" slow-down due to "aging".

Aging is the accumulation of baggage (that which causes resistance to the natural flow of the Life-Force energy to you and through you) held onto in an erroneous belief that it has value. In essence, aging is a byproduct of all those tiny accumulative moments of disallowing Life-Force energy. You know your disallowing or allowing by the way you and power of the Infinite One Source. Science is as much a path to God as is any organized body which studies the various components of Creation. An advanced civilization will recognize this and accept the reality of Oneness in all things, and the debates will give way to exploration of the infinite variations and combinations of this One Energy Potential.

Take the knowledge that you have and share it with those who are interested in what you have to offer. Do not run from debates that cause you frustration; rather, look at them as opportunities for YOU to learn by observation of the reactionary nature of people in general. In as much as you view these traits in others, you will be able to view them in yourself.

You are most often a quite close (if not exact) frequency match with those you have confrontations with, yet you quickly blame the other as being unreasonable, stubborn, or "hard-headed". When you make these observations of another, you can be assured that YOU play a part in creating the observable effect about which you complain.

Perhaps when you recognize your own, say, stubbornness, you will be better able to understand and handle another's tendency toward stubbornness.

Like attracts like! There are NO exceptions!

May you recognize the perfect balance of players present on your planet at this time. As you grow, you attract others into your forever evolving experiences. This will, in turn, precipitate new ideas, challenges, and growth for all involved. There is no end to this cycle, and newness is the goal—never money or physical objects, though they do play a part.

Those with whom you interact on a regular basis hold the insights and answers you are looking for. You each need one another for your combined growth. This especially goes for those you find yourself arguing with regularly for any reason.

Learn to appreciate these ones as much as you would appreciate a newborn infant. Notice that it is easy to appreciate the small toddler who does not judge you in any way and is quick to offer a smile in response to your desire to play.

Each day may you awaken feeling better than the last and having a stronger desire for experiencing the newness of the day before you. May your gaze be upward and outward so as to recognize the Life-Force energy unfolding all around you. Understand that this is truly a short journey along one of the infinite pathways that are available to explore and you cannot do anything truly "wrong".

Allow the inner feelings of happiness and joy to guide you to the health and vitality you desire—and you will have your "miracle" cure.

I am Master Hilarion, come in response to your desire for understanding. In Light and Service to the Infinite Life-Force—Salu!

Let go of the past! It has been written and you cannot change what was. Find yourself in the here-and-now, and learn to flow a little more energy each and every day. In doing so, you will find that you have more physical and emotional energy to give.

And guess what? When you can find something to appreciate and get excited about, you will find those old aches and pains begin to go away and you'll feel a lot better than the day before.

are feeling from moment to moment. If you are feeling anything other than wonderful, you can know that you are restricting Life-Force energy in some way.

Let go of the past! It has been written and you cannot change what was. Find yourself in the here-and-now, and learn to flow a little more energy each and every day. In doing so, you will find that you have more physical and emotional energy to give.

And guess what? When you can find something to appreciate and get excited about, you will find those old aches and pains begin to go away and you'll feel a lot better than the day before.

When those old habits of thought try to resurface, you will know that you simply need to appreciate that your bio-electric sensing machinery (body) is functioning properly and is trying to get a message through to you.

Allow the inner feelings of happiness and joy to guide you to the health and vitality you desire—and you will have your "miracle" cure.

Do not worry if you misunderstand the signals at first, for you will surely be given more, and when you realize what is causing the warning device to sound, you will be rewarded with a great sense of satisfaction, wellbeing, and the knowing that all is unfolding perfectly.

Please consider this an insight to what is fast approaching your physical reality in terms of dynamic change. This change is subtle in nature, yet a powerful tool for unlocking greater and greater potential within those who maintain a diligent desire to master the physical experience. You each have great potential for growth, and with the proper mental focus you will recognize the importance of all those "little" things that often go unnoticed.

Outrageous Antics Of “Holocaust” Opportunists

Editor's note: The following two articles are from the 10/5/98 issue of the Spotlight newspaper. They both deserve wider distribution due to the superb daring of that news source toward informing the public, on an ongoing basis, about this matter.

Our Front Page headline for 9/29/98 read: “Jewish” Airlift From Russia, Open U.S. Borders Demanded By Whiskey King Bronfman. That was “merely” the latest bold move by a gang of thugs who feel they can take whatever they want. The following describes what else this group of dark parasites is up to. They “raise” intimidation to the level of an art form!

SECRET REPORT EXPOSES ZIONIST SCAM

Clinton's willingness to throw
U.S. taxpayers to the wolves will cost you plenty.

by WARREN HOUGH

Apart from the deception operation launched by the White House to set up Congress for passage of the corrupt North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), the Clinton administration has managed to get away with some sweeping falsehoods, scams and outright lies involving issues far more serious than the president's revolting sexual practices, a Spotlight survey has found.

To ingratiate himself with the powerful Zionist lobby, the White House threw its weight behind the clamor or so-called “Holocaust survivors” to receive cash compensation for any calamities they suffered—as did tens of millions of other wartime “survivors”—during World War II.

Stuart Eizenstat, a prominent Zionist advocate promoted to deputy secretary of state, issued an official report suggesting that Swiss banks, among others, owed the “Holocausters” billions of dollars in long-dormant secret bank accounts and other obligations.

Now a prestigious special commission under former U.S. Federal Reserve Chairman Paul Volcker, impeded by the Swiss to investigate all reports of wartime losses, dormant deposits or disputed transactions, is about to issue its final report after two years of painstaking inquiry.

The commission has found that, even with undocumented or dubious claims given the benefit of the doubt, the total liabilities of Swiss financial institutions dating back to

World War II do not exceed $70 million, the Spotlight has learned from well-informed diplomatic sources.

“Note that Volcker ran a broad investigation including Israeli ‘Holocaust historians’, experienced accountants, document examiners and other researchers, all of whom bent over to not exclude any claims stemming from World War II,” says Franz Mehli, a Swiss investigative journalist.

But intimidated by harsh vituperation from the Israel lobby, and by fear of U.S. sanctions threatened by the Clinton administration, two leading Swiss banks have already agreed to hand over $1.25 billion in compensation to self-styled “Holocaust survivors”. This was more than 15 times the total Swiss liability assessed by the Volcker Commission.

On behalf of the Clinton White House, Eizenstat expressed “gratification” at this “settlement”. But, much as this populist newspaper has warned, the Swiss bank's surrender to such extortionate demands settled nothing. To the contrary, it has set off a feeding frenzy among professional “Holocausters” and their insatiable lawyers.

“Any American who buys a Ford or a Chrysler car next year, not to mention a Volkswagon or a Mercedes, will likely pay extra,” predicted Mehli. “Believe it or not, these companies—along with dozens of banks and insurance firms—are being sued now by ‘Holocaust litigators’ for allegedly coercive labor and business practices during World War II.”

The craven submission of the two Swiss banks willing to put up more than $1 billion in what is essentially a blackmail payoff is producing “disastrous results,” warned Dr. Aldo Milinkovich, a former U.S. Treasury chief examiner now serving as a Wall Street consultant.

“The deal has exposed any U.S. manufacturing company with wartime European subsidiaries—not to mention Chrysler, recently merged with Daimler-Benz—to demands for so-called ‘survivor compensation,’” explained this respected observer.

Other economists expressed similar views. “Clinton's willingness to join the Zionist lobby in such an immense, shameless ripoff also reveals that he lies whenever he argues the necessity and inviolability of ‘free trade,’” says financial writer Tarquin de Avila, who covers Wall Street for a number of Latin American news organizations.

“Now that the lies Clinton used to promote his $50 billion post-NAFTA bailout of Mexico's payments system are being exposed, it's scandal time south of the border,” related this veteran reporter.

Not only was the $50 billion misappropriated by corrupt bureaucrats and dishonest bankers, “it turns out that the open-handed U.S. bailout emboldened Mexican financiers to steal even more while the stealing was good,” recounted Avila.

Now the Mexican Congress is wrestling with the problem of what to do about some $65 billion in missing assets—largely money that vanished into the black hole of the nation's crooked banks.

“Clinton, as always, has a ready answer,” noted Milinkovich. “He is proposing yet another, bigger, global bailout to prop up wobbly banks from Brazil to Japan. But before they submit to another such bloodletting, U.S. taxpayers should remember that these White House policies are based on lies—lies far more costly than any of Clinton's perjured protests about his sexual deviations.”

SWISS VIEW OF ‘NAZI GOLD’ DEAL

responsible for the recent blackmail payments of $1.25 billion to alleged Holocaust survivors.

"This was totally deficient conduct of affairs by the Swiss government," said Richard G. Anderegg, a correspondent for Solothurner Zeitung. "I refuse to blame the Zionist organizations."

Jewish organizations fear losing a sense of Jewishness once Jews are accepted into society. Promoters use the Holocaust as a tie that binds to overcome what many observers call an identity crisis.

"They have their problems and they lash out," Anderegg added. "OK, that happens in politics. You have a guy who hits you, if you don't hit back, that's your problem."

Bern failed to "hit back" once Holocaust promoters, headed by the World Jewish Congress (WJC), targeted Swiss banks as Nazi collaborators.

Anderegg served in the Swiss army in 1940. He said Bern should have set the historical scene as it was, rather than as Holocaust promoters want it cast.

NOT ABOUT JEWS

"The Second World War was not about Jews, although they try to make it look that way," Anderegg said.

Had historians, or the Swiss, reminded the world of this, Anderegg suggests things would have ended differently.

"The big failure of our government was they never tried to say, 'Think in terms of when this happened. The Swiss had good reason to do what they did'," the journalist said. "Discussing with these Zionist organizations became like discussing with communists before the end of the Cold War.

"They had their dialectic materialism and part of their debating skill consisted of bringing you right in the beginning to a point where you shied away from using your logic," Anderegg added. "You had to accept theirs. Then you were cooked."

PR OFFENSIVE

When Kurt Waldheim was running for the Austrian presidency in 1986, the WJC opened a worldwide public relations offensive against him. Powerfully placed Jews brought the moral authority of the United States to bear against "the alleged Nazi war criminal" Waldheim.

Once the Austrians elected Waldheim, Jewish activists widened their campaign against all of Austria. For the six years Waldheim sat as president, he was persona non grata and Austria was treated in some circles as a leper nation.

But a careful examination of the facts reveal Waldheim was neither a Nazi nor a war criminal. But Jews in key positions, such as Eli Rosenbaum—director of the U.S. government's Nazi-hunting wing and a former WJC flunky—have swept the facts under the rug.

Something very similar happened during the Swiss/Nazi gold saga, according to the Swiss journalist.

"After the Waldheim campaign, a couple of leading lights [at the WJC] said it's cost us a pretty penny," Anderegg said. "We've been successful, but who cares?"

"Next time, we need to show a balance in hard economic terms," he added. "They kept looking. People like [WJC's Elan] Steinberg and [WJC's Israel] Singer said they then recalled that there was a tremendous loss of assets after the Second World War. They began to look at the best way to get it."

"The first thing they got was that the Swiss National Bank had been a free market accessible to the Germans," Anderegg said. "The trick was to mount some sort of a propaganda with 'Nazi, Nazi, Nazi'. That made every contact with Germany look like something forbidden.

"That's when our government should have stepped in," he added.

Instead, Bern stepped as far away as it could, according to the journalist.

"The government should have said, 'Germany is and was our biggest foreign market. There was no reason for us as a non-belligerent to have unemployment in our country and stop working for that market'," Anderegg explained. "After all, we tried to work with the French and British, but they were so ill prepared for the war that they got booted out of Europe."

With the Swiss government turning a blind eye to the situation, Edgar Bronfman's WJC again brought the authority of the U.S. government behind the claims of Holocaust promoters.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato (R-N.Y.) held hearings in Washington. The Senate Banking Committee uncovered old documents and accepted the written words as fact.

"After 50 years, a lot of documents have been freed that contain a lot of [misleading] raw intelligence," Anderegg said. "Nothing else. Nothing proven. Not one of these documents, which D'Amato especially has launched on the world scene, has added to it the evaluation.

"This has led to a one-sided evaluation through people who wanted something from Switzerland," he added.

Under Secretary of Commerce Stuart Eizenstat served as Bill Clinton's special envoy on a U.S. delegation seeking restitution. Eizenstat served as little more than a lobbyist for the Holocaust promoters, but his presence gave the promoters U.S. muscle.

"This is an exercise in crisis on both sides," Anderegg said. "Our weak government, an identity crisis of the Jewish Diaspora, plus a pretty dishonest role played by the American government. Eizenstat's position is extremely questionable."

An Update On National Fronts

10/15/98 NORA BOYLES

I am going to quote below from an article in The Final Call newspaper, 10/6/98 issue, regarding the rise in what the author of the article calls extreme right-wing political parties in Australia, Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy and Norway in a report to the U.N. General Assembly. My comments will follow the article [quote]:

UNITED NATIONS WORRIED ABOUT THE SPREAD OF GLOBAL RACISM

UNITED NATIONS (IPS)—The United Nations is seriously concerned over evidence of an increase in racism, racial discrimination and xenophobia throughout the world.

"Neo-fascism and neo-nazism are gaining ground in many countries—especially in Europe," warns Maurice Glele-Ahanhanzo, UN Special Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights.

The dramatic increase in racism is reflected by the recent electoral victories of extreme right-wing parties in Australia, Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Italy and Norway. These groups advocate xenophobia, attacks on ethnic, national and religious minorities, and racial and ethnic parties in countries where they are active, Mr. Glele-Ahanhanzo says.

The National Party in Australia, which is against immigrants in that country, won 23 percent of the votes in parliamentary elections in the state of Queensland early this year.

The Liberal Party in Austria has won 22.6 percent of the votes and has 41 members in Parliament. In France, the National Front has won about 15 percent of the votes in various elections, and its influence is growing, he says.

In Italy, the National Alliance has secured about 15.7 percent of the votes and has 53 members in Parliament while the Progress Party in Norway has become the second largest party in that country, with 22 percent of the votes and 41 members of Parliament.

In Germany, the Deutsche Volkunion won 13.2 percent of the votes and 16 seats in recent regional elections. The Flemish Vlaams Blok in Belgium won 12.3 percent of the votes and has 11 representatives in the Federal Parliament, 15 in the Flemish Parliament, five in the Senate and two in the Brussels regional parliament.

In France, about 70,000 of the 150,000 applications submitted for the regularization of the status of aliens were rejected. In an opinion poll by the French National Commission on Human Rights in early 1998, 38 percent of all French men and women said they were openly racist, 27 percent said there are too many Blacks in France while 56 percent said there are too many Arabs.

In a new 10-page report to the General assembly, Mr. Glele-Ahanhanzo says that "this growing increase in the power of the extreme right-wing parties is a cause of concern."

"International public opinion and non-governmental and international organizations, which seems to pay attention only to open conflicts or violent manifestations of fascism or xenophobia, should be alerted," the study noted.

These parties, he said, are "exploiting an economic and social climate characterized by fear and despair endangered by the combined effects of globalization, identity crises and social exclusion."

"They have also made changes designed to make them look like radical right-wing democratic parties, softening their image while enabling them to conceal an unchanged preference for racism and xenophobia," he added.

The study quotes an April 1998 article in Le Monde Diplomatique which says that "for purely electoral motives, classic right-wing parties, are increasingly embracing the slogans of extreme right-wing parties."

"Some young people are also receptive to xenophobic slogans," it commented.

The study singles out the Internet, the information superhighway, as one of the major purveyors of racism. "Over 200 sites worldwide are disseminating racist propaganda," it adds.

The study also says there is increased discriminating against immigrant and migrant workers both in developed and developing nations. "The problem of migrant workers also exists in Africa, and some countries have organized charters for the large-scale deportation of undocumented aliens or have detained such aliens in holding camps prior to their repatriation."

[End quote]

First, it should be noted that most of the nations cited are in the European Economic Union, but all are of course, within the United Nations plans for the New World Order, and feeling the costs, restrictions and suppressions of that plan. The grand scheme of the New World Order is to do away with all nationalism, or national sovereignty. (It is also the grand scheme of Communism and Humanism.) In fact, the author of the article, Maurice Glele-Ahanhanzo, UN Rapporteur of the Commission on Human Rights, states: "These parties...are exploiting an economic and social climate characterized by fear and despair endangered by the combined effects of globalization, identity crises and social exclusion." In other words, he admits that the New World Order (or globalization) is the cause of the bad "climate".

The United Nations is, it should be remembered, a focal point of that globalization.

Second, Mr. Glele-Ahanhanzo links the electoral victories of what he calls "extreme right wing parties" to "neo-fascism and neo-nazism"! Could that mean, if you don't agree with the planned one-world dictatorship of the New World Order, you are a Fascist or a Nazi? You see how the meanings get tangled-up? The Nazis and so-called Fascists of World War II were under the dictators, Hitler and Mussolini. Today, the words, Fascist and Nazis are indiscriminately being thrown at anyone or group that does not agree with globalization, whether they are National, Liberal, Progressive or whatever.

Third, I would say that most of the problems with immigration have their roots in the economic situation. When competition for jobs becomes an issue, it is a matter of who has first chance at the available jobs. This world-wide problem has been engineered by the global trade alliances and the international bankers, it is not "xenophobia" (or a fear or hatred of foreigners) in its true sense but a need to return to an ordered and participatory way of life, something the U.N. and the New World Order do not intend and are not able to bring about. In fact I would say that the increasing rise of what could be called opposition parties is proof that the New World Order is not working, including the European Economic Union and the United Nations.

You may recall that the reason the Nazis wanted to export the Jews from Germany was because the Jews had taken over the financial control of the country, and the German people were in a situation they believed they must change in order to continue as a national sovereign country.

Fourth, the people of the world were not given a vote in the growth of the New World Order. They were fed a great deal of propaganda promoting it in one way or another, but in fact had nothing to say about it. It is not surprising that now those who are waking up to that fact want to return to some measure of control over their lives. The U.N. Charters and Treaties do not conform to most national constitutions. They have been mostly put in place by leaders who assumed greater power than that given by the people or simply went over-the-heads of the citizenry without due process or regard for their wishes. It is almost certain that this kind of dictatorship will sooner or later meet with a lack of support, if not open opposition, of a people considering themselves to be free.

Fifth: I have not studied the purposes of all of the named national political groups or the problems they face. However, I do agree that there are those who do want to change immigration laws or practices. A country should be able to determine how many additional persons it can absorb on a long-term basis, and this always has to do with space and economic opportunity, as well as the beliefs of the citizens. We are not talking here about emergencies, but long-term plans for an ordered economy, culture and growth. To call this "xenophobia" is not appropriate, although I can understand where a long period of unbalanced immigration, deteriorating and unfair economic conditions, and political crises could cause it in some people.

One could ask here: What have the international bankers, the monopolizing merchants, the "elite" power brokers and their New World Order done to improve the situation? Will they come down with a heavy hand and foot on the opposition? It will be interesting to see what unfolds! As Mr. Glele-Ahanhanzo of the U.N. states: "this growing increase in the power of extreme right-wing parties is a concern... International public opinion and non-governmental and international organizations, which seem to pay attention only to open conflicts or violent manifestations of fascism or xenophobia, should be alerted..."

So—they will start the "international public opinion" by calling them Fascists, Nazis and xenophobes, and alert the non-governmental (think-tanks and foundations that pay no taxes and purposely infiltrated and controlled environmental groups of high profile, as well as religious groups, political parties, etc.) and international organizations (regional agencies such as NATO, cooperating investigative units, and other regional alliances such as trade, military, etc.) to stamp out and discredit the opposition.

In the plans for the World Government Federation, which I have written about in previous articles, the non-governmental organizations and international organizations have a vote in the World Government Federation but the people have no say. Obviously, the U.N. General Assembly is aware of the World Government Federation plans and are integrating it and being alerted to carry-out its mandates. (The U.N. was sold to the people upon the premises that it would provide a forum for all world governments to talk out their problems. However, the plans of the "Elite" and world political, banking, trade and military controllers were to use it as the first step in establishing their plan for an eventual fully authorized and managed World Government Federation. You see a hint of their plans here in action.)

Sixth: There is a perfect example of how the international trading monopolies work and crowd out the private or national business sectors close to my home, and I expect close to many people these days.

During a news report on Channel 29 out of Bakersfield, California on 10/7/98, I learned about ground-breaking for a huge International Mall in Bakersfield. It is located in an area which can support much growth, and is near to the railroad—an important asset necessary for transporting International goods from the Port of Los Angeles to Bakersfield. (You may also be aware of the ever-increasing trade deficit caused by the boat loads of cheap Asian goods entering our ports on the West Coast, and empty ships returning to Asia. In other words, the Asians cannot afford to buy American goods for the return trip.)

The news reporters were enthusiastic over the potential for new jobs with the creation of this huge mall. How many people heard the statements that this international operation would be using rules other than that required of the rest of the business sector? Yes, it was reported that they will be setting their own "International Rules" on taxes! The one example given on TV was the tax on fabric. Businesses generally pay a tax on a bolt of cloth. However, the internationalists only pay taxes on the cloth used! That means that when a garment is cut from the bolt of cloth, the scraps not used are not counted! We were told these scraps amount to 50% of the fabric! I suppose one could extrapolate this method of taxation to other goods such as building material, etc. What other goodies these "Internationalist Rules" provide to the owners of the proposed mall was not stated. Nevertheless this one example provides the "writing on the wall". The private or national business sector of any country or state is intended to carry the major tax burdens of government, roads, services, etc., for these "internationalists", making them far less able to compete in what the internationalists call "free trade". The jobs provided by this international group are literally jobs to be taken from our own business sector, which is being foreclosed!

Worse, the clothing goods being shipped in through the Port of Los Angeles from Asia are largely produced through slave labor. The wages provided to the Asians by the "internationalists" will make it impossible for them to afford to buy American goods. Those empty return ships will remain empty until soon Americans will be unable to buy the Asian goods! This should not happen in a sovereign national country. It certainly has to do with a form of racism, that of the "internationalists" and their cohorts who place themselves above the rest of us. This kind of racism can surely cause other racial unrest due to governmental inequities, the close-down of private and national business, high taxes and ever increasing "international" intrusion into our lives.

There was no statement made on the TV news report as to how these "internationalists" worked out such a sweet deal for themselves with the various levels of government! It would appear on the surface that they are arrogantly declaring their location to be "international soil", and not a part of the County of Kern, State of California and Country of the U.S. of A., to which we in this location pay taxes! Are these "internationalists" just testing the public's awareness and potential response, or has the One World Government already become so powerful that they feel secure in flaunting their "International Rules" onto a sleepy people who believe they are still somehow citizens of a particular sovereign country?

Who are these "internationalists"? Could they be the ones about which nationalists are xenophobic? Who made the "Internationalist Rules" laws? Did you have any say in it or vote on it?

This is the way your sovereignty is taken away, with long-term planning and bit by bit.

The same type of scheme is being promulgated on the land either side of the U.S.A./Mexico Border. Large corporations, among them Dodge and A.T.&T., are producing their products with Mexican labor at $2.00 per hour. They have arranged a deal whereby they pay no taxes. They promised to build public infrastructures to handle their business (i.e., sanitation facilities, roads, etc.) but have not done so. The small towns cannot afford to build what is necessary to accommodate the influx of people for the jobs. The new wage earners do not receive enough to pay taxes, or to build living quarters. The area has become a shanty town for workers and an environmental hazard of the first order. Apparently the "internationalists" are exempt from environmental rules as well as taxes! Still, the Dodge cars and trucks sell for market prices in the U.S. of A., and A.T.&T. prices are as high as the rest of the communication services. It is also true that the more cheaply-made clothing being shipped in from Asia sells for ever-increasing prices in America.

It is a forgone conclusion that the lower paid wage-earners will sooner or later resent those low wages, and the U.S. workers thrown out of jobs will resent those who took them away, and the government workers will resent the industries who do not shoulder their responsibilities and cause government layoffs and shutdowns. I only hope all of them see where lies the true cause of their problems, and those who are actually robbing them all for huge profits through grossly unfair international trade practices, along with those who made it possible through corrupt and unconstitutional government practices and sweet deals in this country and abroad.

TELEPHONE HOTLINE 805-822-0202

As an adjunct to CONTACT, the Telephone Hotline keeps you as informed as possible on current events and other important information that needs to get to our subscribers before our publishing date.

The message machine will answer after 2 rings if there are any new messages for that day, and after 4 rings if not. Thus daily callers can hang up after 2 rings and save toll charges if no new message has been recorded. If the Hotline does not answer your call, then there is currently no Hotline message.
